Photo 4: Photo taken from the reclamation area. Photo shows Scotch thistle has established within the disturbance. This is a Colorado State listed noxious weed and needs to be removed and managed.

Photo 5: Photo taken from the reclamation area. Area appears to have had reclamation work conducted, evidence suggest location had been reseeded, and straw crimped into the soil for stabilization. However, there are areas within the reclamation area where germination does not appear evident. These areas will need to be monitored and if it is determined that reclamation is not progressing, then additional seeding may be required.
